Not illustrated. 1842 edition. Excerpt: ...behind him, and became a Franciscan friar. He rose at length to the bishopric of Malaga, where he exhibited the greatest humility, penitence, and charity. Whatever he possessed he bestowed upon the poor. To one he gave his curtains, to another his table furniture; and, on one occasion, when two soldiers, who were very poor, sought his aid, he divided between them his breastplate of amethyst, using afterwards in its place a cross of wood. He even parted with his cane, using in the place of it a common stick. His only means of conveyance was a small mule, and, one day, while riding through the midst of the city, he dismounted, and borrowing a needle and thread, he mended with his own hands the strap to his stirrup. During the eight years that he was bishop, his alms amounted to $ 732,000; of which, 200,000 were for masses for souls in purgatory, at the rate of at least four daily masses; 80,000 for daily charity at the gate; 30,000 for the poor of both sexes, reduced from former rank and standing; 20,000 for medicines for the poor who were sick; 20,000 to rebuild forty churches; 22,000 for hospitals; 10,000 for the king in a case of emergency; and 350,000 for grain for the poor. All that he possessed at the time of his death was a scanty and well-worn wardrobe, a single hat, one bed, and the mule on which he rode. His fastings were frequent and severe, and his body was torn and lacerated by self-inflicted scourging. The climate of Malaga is very mild and equable. Frost, of the thickness of a dollar, has been known there but twice in twenty years; and the barometer never varies more than an inch, its range being between 29J and 30J. The thermometer, during the day, commonly ranges, in the winter months, from 56 to 58; in May and June, from 72 to...
